

Red China Condemns New Soviet Leaders As 'Sly' Khrushchevs

Russian Diplomats Accused of Seeking Peace in Viet-Nam

Communist China fired a sharp new broadside at the Soviet Union today, charging that the new Russian leaders are more covert and cunning than Nikita S. Khrushchev in trying to change the ways of communism.

Peking also accused the Soviet leadership of cooperating with the United States in seeking to dominate the world.

It said Soviet diplomats are "busy in Washington, London and Paris" trying to bring about peace negotiations on Viet-Nam, and pledge to fight Soviet revisionism to the end.

The charges were made in a broadcast dispatch by the New China News Agency, which quoted from an article published in both the Peking People's Daily, the official newspaper, and Red Flag, the Chinese Communist Party's theoretical magazine.

Hours before, Peking Radio alerted the outside world by announcing that an important document would be broadcast.

The broadcast from Peking said the article claims that "although the new leaders of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union have put on much camouflage and played many tricks, they have in no way departed from their essence."

This, it said, "Khrushchev revisionism, splittism and great power chauvinism and Soviet-U.S. cooperation for the domination of the world."

"But compared with Khrushchev, they are practicing a more covert, more cunning and more dangerous revisionism," the broadcast said.

The new attack on the Soviet leaders came on the second anniversary of the publication of the Chinese Communist Party's "proposal concerning the general line of the international Communist movement."

This proposal "drew a clear line between Marxism-Leninism and Khrushchev revisionism on a number of major problems of the contemporary world revolution and made a great theoretical contribution to the struggle against Khrushchev revisionism," the broadcast said.

It added that in the eight months since the new Kremlin rulers took over, they have been following "in Khrushchev's footsteps and they are carrying out Khrushchev revisionism without Khrushchev."

"The privileged stratum in the Soviet Union got rid of Khrushchev not because he practiced revisionism, but because he was too stupid and disreputable, and because he was impaled on a dilemma in internal and external affairs," the broadcast said.

Khrushchev was "opposed and condemned by the masses, deserted by his followers and threatened by a growing crisis, and therefore could not muddle on any longer."

"Thus it came to a pass that Khrushchev himself became an obstacle to the pursuit of Khrushchev revisionism," it added.

Khrushchev was removed in October and replaced by Leonid Brezhnev as Communist Party chief and Alexei Kosygin as Premier.

The article commented that while the Soviet leaders made "some gestures of aid to (North) Viet-Nam, they have divulged their aid plans to the Americans in advance."

It declared that the Russians have also been "busy in Washington, London and Paris trying to bring about peace negotiations, in a painstaking effort to find a way out for the U.S. aggressors."

"The question confronting the Chinese Communists today is whether to carry the struggle against Khrushchev revisionism to the end or whether to stop halfway," the broadcast said.

The Russians, the Chinese said, "are trying in vain to halt the struggle against revisionism."

"We must do the exact opposite; we must continue our triumphant pursuit and firmly carry forward the fight against Khrushchev revisionism to the very end."
